

South King County Roundtable Conversations

What

A series of three roundtable conversations, hosted virtually, where attendees can discuss emerging and existing needs of the communities they serve. Each event has a unique theme, based on known needs, gaps, and concerns for South King.

Why

As author Heather McGhee writes, “We pull through hard times by pulling together.” The last year has shown our community to be resilient and resourceful in the face of challenge. As our community and country recovers, we can take this opportunity to center the needs of South King County.

The South King County Roundtable Conversation series is an opportunity for cross-sector collaboration. We will be working to find solutions that serve our community today. Our conversation will provide space to break down existing silos and find necessary answers to existing barriers. These conversations are also an opportunity to establish relationships and networks that can build toward a more connected future.

When

Each roundtable conversation is scheduled for the last Friday of the month, from 10:30 AM to 12 PM. They each center unique topics, which can stand alone, or build together to create a full picture of the needs of our region.

Community Access to Key Resources

How are SKC community members getting their crucial needs met? Housing and shelter, access to food, financial support – and more. How can we bridge gaps to improve access?

Advocating in South King

Changes in the last year, coupled with regional disparities, raise concerns for community members and service providers alike. How can agencies, cities, and organizations work together to advocate for the needs of community members?

Who

The South King Roundtable Conversations are open to all. If you can speak directly to the experience of clients or hold decision making power in your organization, please join us. For example, if you work as a human service provider, community advocate, or represent a city, please join our conversation. If you serve the housing, employment, education, financial support services, food access, medical needs, or any other crucial service of the South King community – welcome to our table.

These conversations will be the most fruitful if they are representative of all services in the region.
