Please Don't Repeat That!

We often meet with designers who arrive with a wallpaper as inspiration or to replicate it in a different palette. While we genuinely admire the craft behind a few exceptional hand-painted or hand-blocked wallpaper lines, most are mass produced and simply a starting point for a more in depth conversation.

Wallpaper has its place, but also its limitations. A custom painted mural or finish is created for your unique space, in exact colors, wrapping around any architectural detail or furnishings without compromise, and best of all no seams or repeats!

Custom painting is often reserved for the rooms that make the biggest impression - the entry hall that sets the tone for an entire home, the dining room where guests linger, a guest bedroom, a bar or powder room where a little drama goes a long way. The most public spaces, the ones people remember.

Perhaps most importantly, a custom mural or decorative finish carries an authenticity that resonates deeply with discerning clients. In a world of mass production, there is something genuinely powerful about knowing that what graces your walls was created by artists and artisans and was conceived for this home, this room, this client. That exclusivity elevates a project from beautifully decorated to truly curated - and it reflects back on the designer and architect who have trusted our talents within their overall vision.

Some of our favorite work begins not with a client brief, but with a question we ask ourselves in the studio: what haven't we tried yet? This season, we've been deep in experimentation - pushing Eglomise into new territory with four fresh concepts that explore unexpected combinations of texture, color, pattern, and scale.

We're bringing these to life as sample pieces to share with the designers and architects we collaborate with most - because we know that the best projects often begin with something tangible in hand. A sample on a desk has a way of sparking conversations or finding its way into a mood board. These are meant to live in your studio, to show clients who may not yet be familiar with Eglomise what the medium is truly capable of.

If any of these speak to you and you'd like to receive a sample or set of samples, we'd love to hear from you - just drop us a reply.

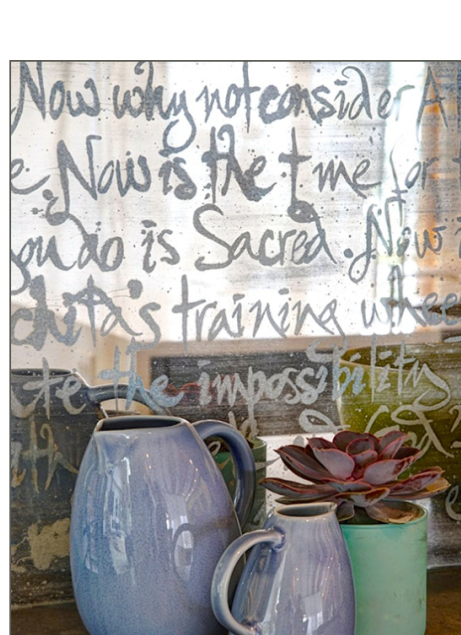

The Writing on the Wall Glass

Eglomise is an ancient gilding technique - glass worked from its reverse side with gold leaf, mirroring, glazes, and hand painting - and in the right hands, it becomes something luminous, precious and intriguing.

In our studio, Eglomise finds its perfect partner when we incorporate the calligraphy of our co-founder Jorge, whose artistic flourishes transform backslashes, focal walls, and bars and more into pieces that invite you to lean in and appreciate both the aesthetics and the deeper meaning behind the writing.

The words themselves are chosen by the client - and that conversation is always one of our favorites. We've rendered beloved song lyrics, cherished poems, historical speeches, and theatrical scripts, each one carrying a meaning that is entirely personal. It is the client, ultimately, that will be reflected in those meaningful words.

Every composition is also tailored to the room it will inhabit - the scale, the palette, and the architecture. A sweeping script that fills a dining room wall reads very differently than a verse tucked into an intimate bar, and we calibrate every project accordingly. The result is not decoration in the traditional sense. It is memory, meaning, and craftsmanship, suspended in glass.

A Fun Idea!

A favorite interior designer that we have collaborated with on multiple projects had the idea to frame two of our past asemantic calligraphy samples and hang them in her studio.

We consider that quite a compliment!

We'd love to work with you on your next project!

Enjoy the Sunshine!
