Melis Kaya (12 years), International School LGB Geneva : The Healing Alien

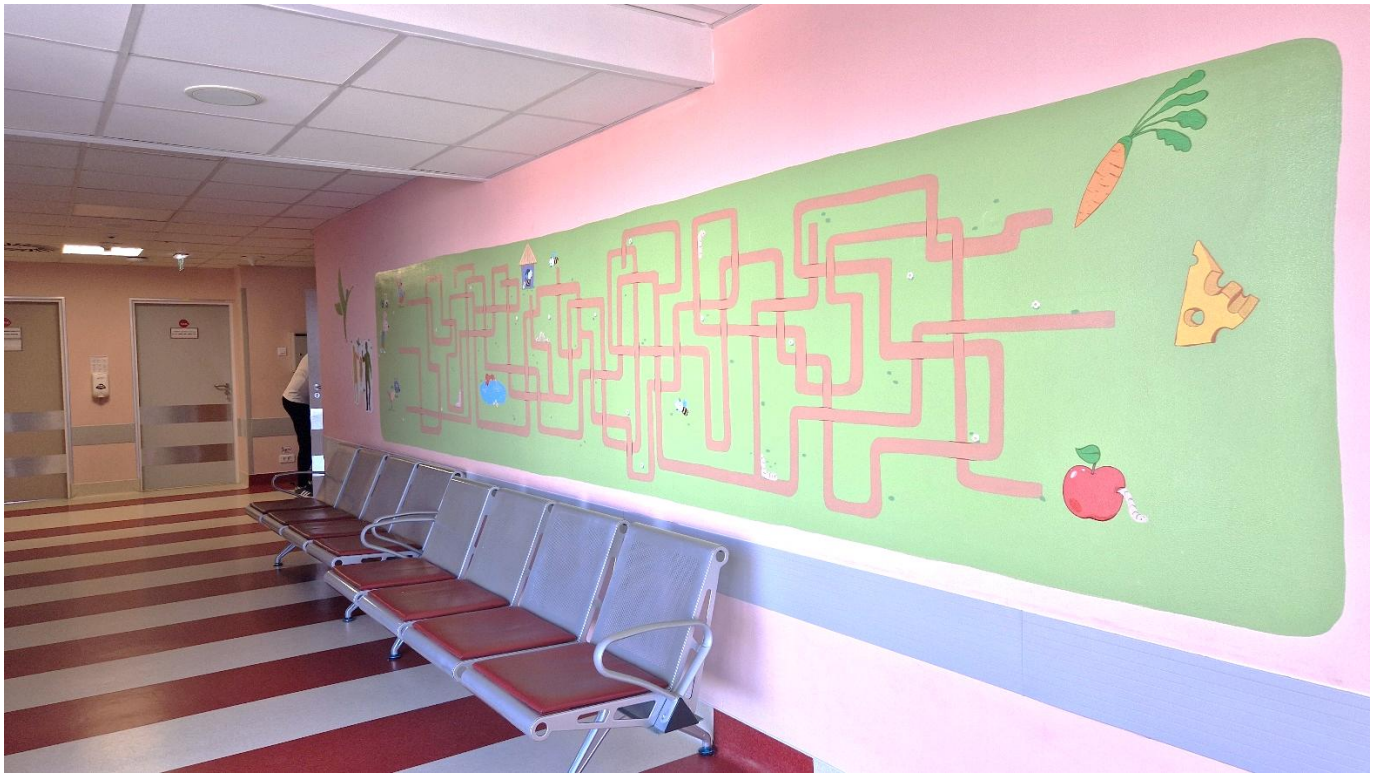

In this vibrant universe where imagination triumphs, the jury was captivated by the boldness and warmth of this child's creation. The combination of healer astronauts and friendly extraterrestrial creatures evokes a waking dream - a celestial embrace of joy and childhood innocence. Each character tells a story of courage, exploration, and intergalactic friendship. This hopeful, sparkling drawing will turn a hospital wall into a window onto a whimsical world where the weight of illness lifts, inviting children to smile, dream, and heal.

Enfant (11 years), 'Future Day' Takeda, Zurich: A Never-Ending Game

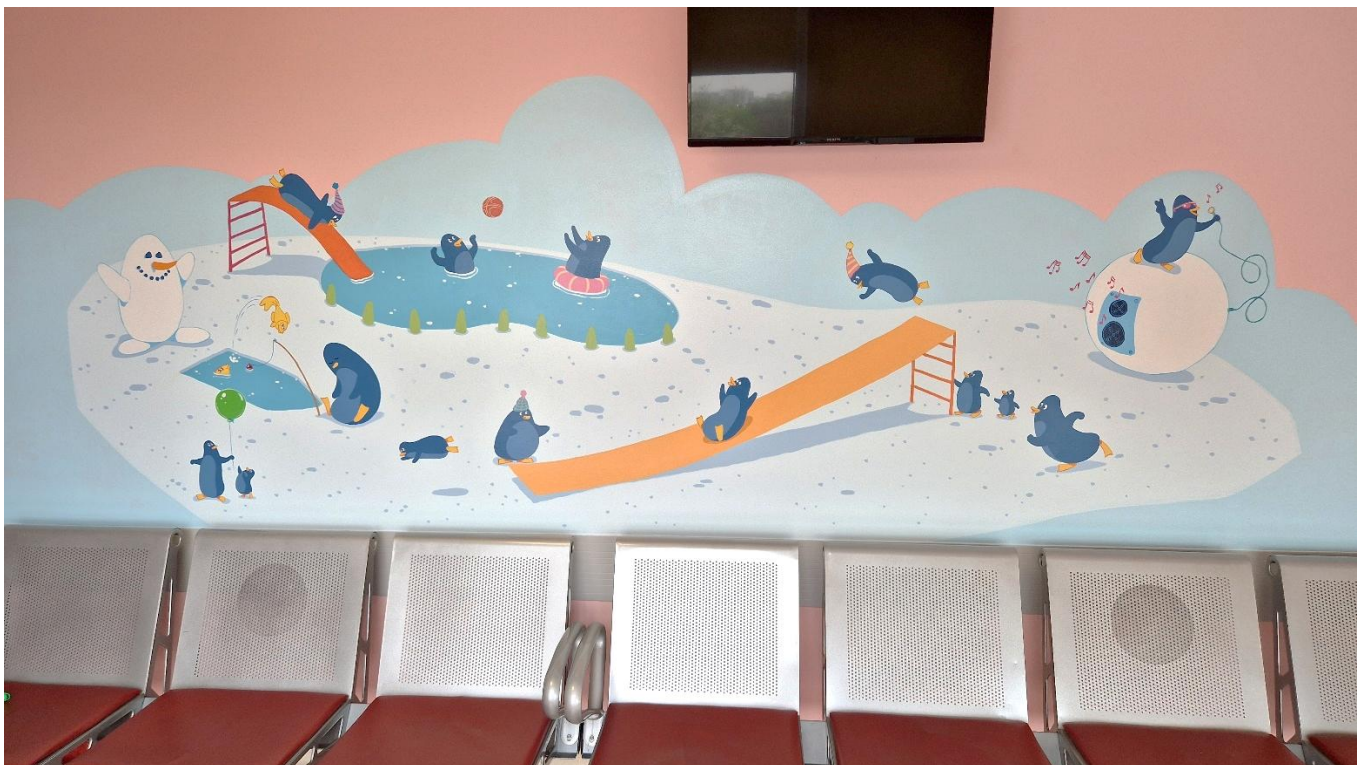

Chosen by our jury, this artwork stands out with its maze of intertwined paths—a metaphor for life's many journeys—filled with playful vignettes. At the top, a mysterious chest sits like the ultimate goal of a quest or a symbol of collected adventures. Scattered objects like crowns and candy serve as fun rewards or simple pleasures along the way. Music and vehicles animate this journey, reminding us that motion exists even in the calm of a care setting.

Allia (9 years), International School of Schaffhausen

The jury was unanimous in its delight with this lively, heartwarming illustration. It features an exuberant penguin party, overflowing with joy and playful activities that capture the essence of childhood delight. A penguin pool and an ice dance floor showcase refreshing creativity, sure to bring a smile to every viewer. Each penguin is caught in a moment of pure happiness, offering countless little stories to uncover. In its innocence, this drawing will add a sense of lightness and escape to any wall—becoming a source of comfort and inspiration.

Le Jury met on February 2, 2024

Art teacher feedback

"Art4Impact is a tremendous opportunity for our students.

Our 9th graders are deeply motivated by the Art4Impact program, which helps children battling illness. It's more than just an art project they create for themselves and bring home for their own enjoyment and their family's—it gives them a sense of responsibility, purpose, and meaning they don't often experience at their age. It encourages them to rise, to think beyond themselves, to develop empathy, and to create something that inspires and improves hospital life. It's also motivating to see that they don't need to be great at realistic drawing—their creative and impactful ideas are what matter most.

The chance that their design might be painted by professional artists, in XXL format on a hospital wall, is hugely inspiring. It helps them focus and take the project seriously. They often ask me when the jury will meet and when they'll know if a winner was selected from LGB. Last year, during the Y9 end-of-year assembly, when the name of the winner was announced and it turned out to be someone from LGB, the students were so excited—they cheered like crazy..."
