LibraryWise: Greenwood Reading Center

Hello from the new building! Have you noticed a popup pavilion in front of our soon-to-be library building on Tuesdays or Thursdays? We have Drive-up Library hours from 2 until 4. Pop in to choose a book from the selection on the table, catch up with us, and have a snack or a cup of your favorite hot beverage from the new Keurig coffee maker. Many thanks to the Whitesville Public Library for loaning us their easy-up. We'll keep going until the weather makes us quit. We miss our patrons!

Even though it doesn't look like much is going on with our shabby old lady, we're working behind the scenes on small projects for now. So far, we've turned on the lights and heat, created our plan of action, started the bathroom, reinforced the floor, and started gathering materials. If you have leftover materials from a recent building project, please let us know! So far, friends and patrons have donated quite a few necessary items, but the need is great. Eventually, the building will become what she was always meant to be. (Please don't tell her I called her 'shabby'.)

If you went by the old library building and the Greenwood History Museum on October 10, you might have seen us in our rocking chairs, asking for donations. Our Rockathon raised nearly a thousand dollars for our renovations. Thank you to our generous patrons, the Greenwood Historical Society, and especially our extra-special volunteers. Without you, this wouldn't have been the success that it was- or as fun. Thank you!

We are hoping to be able to reopen early in the new year. More details and updates as they come; lots of things are in the works. In the meantime, happy reading!

A quote often misattributed to the ancient Greek philosopher, Aristotle, states, “It is the mark of an educated mind to be able to entertain an idea without necessarily accepting it.” And while Aristotle may not have written or spoken the words contained in the immediately aforementioned quote, the sagacity of said quote is not diminished. Additionally, one of the founding principles of the birth of the United States was the belief in religious liberty. Americans are legally free to be a member of any one of a myriad of religious faiths, cobble together a hodgepodge of spiritual beliefs from a vast array of different religions, or be an agnostic or atheist. In general, I strive to be a tolerant person where the religious faith of others is concerned. In the 1992 United States Supreme Court case, Lee v. Weisman (a First Amendment case largely centered on the separation of religion and state), the now late Justice Antonin Scalia wrote in his dissenting opinion, “But surely our social conventions have not coarsened to the point that anyone who does not stand on his chair and shout obscenities can be reasonably deemed to have assented to everything said in his presence.” So, when peoplewho are of the Amish faith and culture do not want a photo snapped of their person, I acquiesce to that person’s religions beliefs. When a person of the Jewish faith declines eating pork because of religious dietary constraints, no offense should be taken. The refusal to partake of a dish containing pork is not predicated on the culinary skills of the cook who prepared said dish. So when an acquaintance of the Hindu faith and I spoke recently, I was quite diplomatic when, after I regaled her of the latest antics of my cat, Linus, she opined, “Linus sounds as if he was a Mafia crime boss in a past life.” I chuckled slightly until Usha said, “I am quite serious. In my faith, we believe in reincarnation. As well as that souls may transmigrate between species.” I stammered out, “Well, Linus does love Italian food.” Usha continued. “What else does Linus do all day?” I replied. “Well aside from sleeping and eating, when I resided in that tiny attic apartment in a borough of New York City, he used to quite often kill the rodents ubiquitous in that apartment.” I shrugged. “But many cats do that!,” my cat-Mom protectiveness rising to the surface. Usha then inquired if Linus left the deceased rodents at my feet, as many cats do. I informed her that Linus always placed the slaughtered rodents in the bathtub. “Ah, I see! A Mafia killing ritual.” I responded that Linus strictly confines his killing activities to rodents, but then I recalled the time that the slumlord of said apartment (who was constantly casting untrue culpability on my cats for the pervasive miasma redolent of cat urine in said apartment that was later revealed to originate from the species of mold present in said apartment as well as the sewer gases from the toilet that said slumlord always refused to properly repair), was nearly knocked down the full flight of stairs in that tiny attic apartment. After yet again refusing to thoroughly repair the toilet therein, as the slumlord turned to walk down the tiny attic apartment’s full length staircase, unbeknownst to me, my Linus rubbed against the slumlord’s ankles, thereby almost catapulting the slumlord down a full length staircase. I know that when nearly every cat on the planet rubs his/her face against one’s legs, he/she is “marking” one with his/her scent. It is sign of affection. But my Linus, although quite affable with me, has never, in fifteen years, ever rubbed his face against my legs Then my mind cast back to the time that a relative who neither I or my Linus liked screamed when said relative found my Linus’ stuffed fish catnip toys in the bed that said relative was supposed to sleep in. Said relative exclaimed something to the effect of, “Linus is threatening me that I will be ‘sleeping with the fishes!’” I thought that I had allayed said relative’s fears in that regard, but later that night, I could have sworn that I overheard a voice on the other end of the phone exclaim, with obviously barely restrained patience, “For the last time! The FBI does not paw-print cats!”

Usha said to me, “Penny for your thoughts,” and I realized that I had been ruminating on the antics of my Linus a tad too long. “Okay, nice chatting with you, Usha! I have to go feed my Linus now, as he is meowing at me!” I didn’t add that it was to the theme of The Godfather movie.

A Good Attitude

The dictionary defines “attitude” as a manner of acting that shows one’s inward thoughts and feelings. Each of us has an attitude, and the way we project ourselves to others helps shape our character and define our personality. A person’s attitude and individuality are developed over the years as a result of all the positive and negative situations they encounter. A person with a good attitude is usually more congenial, friendly and pleasant with others. They are well liked, easier to get along with and less anxious. In general, people just seem to enjoy their company. A more negative person with a poor attitude seems to worry more, is often uneasy and frets about things that may happen in the future. Changing one’s attitude or personality is difficult. However, all things are possible with God. The Bible tells us that we should have the attitude of Christ Jesus (Philippians 2:5). As humans, we have all come short of His glory. Although it is not easy to always have a good attitude, God wants us to keep trying to be the best person we can be.

When a man’s ways please the Lord, he makes even his enemies to be at peace with him. R.S.V. Proverbs 16:7
