

Jason Colon Chief of Police Designate - Manitoba First Nations Police Service

Jason Colon brings over two decades of law enforcement experience and a proven record of executive leadership dedicated to advancing the safety, wellbeing, and self determination of First Nations communities.

His policing career spans service with the Manitoba First Nations Police Service, Blood Tribe Police, Dakota Ojibway Police Service, and Winnipeg Police Service, where he has served in roles ranging from Constable to Inspector and Interim Chief of Police. Jason is a strong advocate of trauma-informed and culturally competent policing.

He prioritizes compassion, cultural awareness, and proactive partnerships. His leadership is rooted in collaboration with community leaders, provincial and federal partners, and the men and women of the MFNPS to address critical public safety needs while fostering healing and trust.

Academically, Jason holds a Bachelor of Policing and a Master of Executive Police Leadership from Charles Sturt University. He has also completed executive and leadership training at the Canadian Police College, the Edmonton Police Service, and Dalhousie University.

Jason is married and has five children and three beautiful grandchildren.

“As I begin my role as Chief of Police, I am dedicated to promoting modern, community-based policing focused on compassion and cultural awareness. Together with our team and partners, we will address public safety needs and support First Nations communities across Manitoba.”
