A Child Was Born

Silent, deep in the night
Half spent, one mother's child
Was sent, into a world that would know Him not

Dayspring, joy to the world
Would bring, angels and men
Still sing, the world that longed for His light to shine

He was born to bring new life to the sons of men
Even then was the treasure sold
Even then was the treasure sold

He came, making no earthly claim
Suffered the guilt and shame, He never knew
For me and you, still we knew Him not

Surely he bore all our sorrow and despair
This despised and forsaken man
A despised and forsaken man

Silent, deep in the night
Half spent, one mother's child
Was sent, into a world that would know Him not
A child was born, and we knew Him not
