BOBBY

BOBBY: Hope?!

HOPE: What are you doing, Bobby?! I told you to follow your heart, not seize an amenity!

BOBBY: I did follow my heart, Hope. Thanks to you.

PENNY: The amenity won't take much more of this uprising, Caldwell. Bobby's a sweet boy, but not sweet enough to sweeten that spillage, not by a long shot.

BOBBY: The amenity will take as much as it has to, Ms. Pennywise. The days of deprivation are over for these people.

THE POOR: Hooray!

CLADWELL: The days of deprivation have just begun if this madness continues a moment longer.

THE POOR: Ooooo!

BOBBY: Sure, Mister Cladwell, that's what you've been saying for twenty years. And for twenty years we've waited for the long-term solutions that never came. Well, we're done waiting, you see, for a new day has dawned today. A day of hope and happiness (Musical vamp begins.) when the idea of human dignity is more than just a forgotten notion, but a living, breathing reality. A day—this day—when the people pee for free, because the people are free!

THE POOR: Hooray!

BOBBY: (Sings.)

Free!

People are free!

How can a fee

Enslave us?

See

How we can be

Free from the chains

He gave us!

We're suffering now

Such lives of sorrow!
