In Scripture Today

Luke 12:13-21

Luke assumes an economically successful audience for his parable, which challenges contemporary Christians in capitalist economies who ought to save for old age. Our treasure is in God, and our very life is held in God's hands.

Ecclesiastes 1:2, 12-14; 2:18-23

By setting this passage from Ecclesiastes next to Luke's parable, the lectionary sets us between the truth of the Teacher's disgust with the world's values and the practical necessities of living in the real world. Even the societal expectation that one's eldest son will inherit one's property is debunked. Ecclesiastes is the Bible's most disheartening book, and the church demonstrates its awareness of the complexity of living before God by recognizing also this book as "word of God, word of life."

Colossians 3:1-11

This, the last of four semi-continuous readings from Colossians, fits well with today's gospel by listing greed as idolatry. Baptism remakes us, returning us to God's intention, in which Christ is our all.
