In Scripture Today

Matthew 14:22-33

Jesus' power over nature, his claim "I am," and his rescue of Peter proclaim that Jesus is divine. The sea is our chaos, Peter's doubt our own. With Peter we ask Jesus to save us, and with the disciples we acclaim him the Son of God. "Do not be afraid," Jesus says both to the disciples in the boat and to the women at the empty tomb.

1 Kings 19:9-18

The narrative of Elijah encountering only sheer silence is an ironic tale in the genre of theophanies that show divine power through the forces of nature. Matthew's story of the stilling of the tempest fits more traditionally into a religious expectation that God has power over nature. The lectionary appoints both.

Romans 10:5-15

We assemble on Sunday to hear the very word of which Paul speaks. Today our faith in Christ saves us; now we hear God's sheer silence; now the storm is stilled.
