In Scripture Today

Luke 14:25-33

The text presents the homiletical challenge of taking Jesus' words seriously without taking them literally. The charge to hate everyone and even life itself stands next to the call to love one another (Luke 10:27), and despite this command to give up all our possessions, in the Acts of the Apostles, Luke lauds wealthy Christians for their support of the community. Here Luke's repeated theme, that God forgives, is shown to have a cost. If there was no cost, if forgiveness is totally free, why did Jesus have to die? When we come forward for holy communion, we are indeed following Jesus and his cross.

Deuteronomy 30:15-20

This passage is set next to Luke's call to radical discipleship because also Moses anticipates that faithfulness to the covenant will be difficult. We can choose blessings, or we can choose curses. According to the Deuteronomist, God cannot be expected to bless those who chose other commitments. As the community of faith, we are part of the blessing that God gives to one another.

Philemon 1-21

Reading Philemon makes clear that Christian ethics has always been debated: Paul is asking that Onesimus be treated now as a brother, not merely a slave; and yet the household codes tell slaves and masters to keep to their places. Thus on many issues both sides of ethical disputes can find some support in the Bible. We hear Paul's counsel for Christians to live in compassion to others and to enact the familial love given them in baptism. This is the only place in the three-year lectionary that appoints Philemon.
