I am writing to express my concerns about the consequences of increasing naturalization application fees. USCIS should not be increasing immigration application fees because it will price people out of accessing certain immigration and citizenship programs and associated critical benefits. These programs and benefits not only help immigrants socially, economically, and civically, but also benefit our society and economy as a whole.

By increasing immigration and naturalization application fees, USCIS will be placing additional barriers for individuals living with low incomes. This is not only inhumane, but it will have devastating consequences on the US workforce and economy.

I urge USCIS not to raise immigration application fees.
