Alice Springs Airport Earns ACI Accreditation

Alice Springs Airport (ASA) has received accreditation from Airports Council International (ACI) for health measures and practices that are in place at the airport to combat COVID-19.

The accreditation recognises these measures are in line with international recommendations and industry best practices.

The accreditation is the result of a rigorous Airport Health Accreditation Process, which is managed by ACI and International Civil Aviation Organisation, which assesses airports around the world on the implementation of health measures that ensure the safety of all passengers, visitors and staff.

"We are delighted to join the small number of airports in Australia to receive this recognition," said General Manager Alice Springs Airport, Dave Batic.

"Prioritising health and safety are at the core of our business and is particularly important now, as the world grapples with the COVID-19 pandemic."

"This international accreditation clearly demonstrates that our procedures are in line with globally recommended health measures, which is a great achievement for a regional airport and is sure to give confidence to the travelling public."

"Our hard-working staff are committed to ensuring the safety of everyone who passes through ASA and this accreditation is a result of their outstanding efforts."

ASA has a range of safety and sanitary measures in place – from regular deep cleaning of the terminal to hand sanitising stations and social distancing processes.

ASA has achieved this recognition just 3 weeks after Darwin International Airport.
