“The Art of Dying”

By Fr. Joseph Juknialis

When I was much younger and idealistic, I might have been ready to die for some worthy cause. Friends who were about my age had the same experience. There was something romantic about giving our lives then. Something glorious—or so we thought. There was the brotherhood and sisterhood of us all, peace and non-violence, nuclear arms opposition, equal opportunities for education and housing. Many of us around the same age thought we would lay down our lives for any one of those dreams.

For some of us, things have changed. We’ve grown older and, perhaps, wiser, and it seems we’re not so eager to die anymore. The glamor has been tarnished, and, for some, the romance has turned from infatuation to disillusion. Death seems like a tragedy, continually rearing its strength to destroy in full or in part the fruit of our lives.

Yet, death continues to remain the only doorway into real life. Without death, there is no life—in this life or in any life. For that reason, then, one of the tasks of life is to learn how to die well, which is something we also need to teach our children. It takes a lifetime to learn how to die for one another, and that is why our young people need a community of adults who seek to master the art of dying. It is also why, for one long week, we tell the story of Jesus and of how, for the sake of us all, he did not back away from death.

“El arte de morir”Por el Padre Joseph Juknialis*

Cuando yo era mucho más joven e idealista, tal vez hubiera estado dispuesto a morir por alguna causa digna. Amigos de mi misma edad vivieron la misma experiencia. Había algo romántico en entregar nuestras vidas en aquel entonces. Algo glorioso —o eso creíamos. Existía la hermandad entre todos nosotros, la paz y la no violencia, la oposición a las armas nucleares, la igualdad de oportunidades en la educación y la vivienda. Muchos de nosotros, de edad similar, pensábamos que entregaríamos nuestras vidas por cualquiera de esos sueños.

Para algunos de nosotros, las cosas han cambiado. Hemos envejecido y, tal vez, nos hemos vuelto más sabios; y parece que ya no estamos tan ansiosos por morir. El glamour se ha deslustrado y, para algunos, el romance ha pasado del enamoramiento a la desilusión. La muerte parece una tragedia que alza continuamente su fuerza para destruir, total o parcialmente, el fruto de nuestras vidas.

Sin embargo, la muerte sigue siendo la única puerta de entrada a la vida verdadera. Sin muerte, no hay vida —ni en esta vida ni en ninguna otra. Por esa razón, entonces, una de las tareas de la vida consiste en aprender a morir bien; algo que también debemos enseñar a nuestros hijos. Se necesita toda una vida para aprender a morir los unos por los otros, y es por ello que nuestros jóvenes necesitan una comunidad de adultos que busquen dominar el arte de morir. Es también la razón por la cual, durante una larga semana, contamos la historia de Jesús y de cómo, por el bien de todos nosotros, él no retrocedió ante la muerte.

Una de las tareas de la vida consiste en aprender a morir bien.
